

How To Memorize Scripture

1. Select The Particular Version you wish to memorize. Use it exclusively when teaching from the Bible. Use the same Bible so that your verses are always at the same place on the page.
2. Find Someone To Memorize With You - your spouse, a preacher, or any other friend. Its better whenever two people memorize, then recite to each other at scheduled times. Two people can maintain goals easier by keeping each other on schedule.
3. Memorize A Few Verses Each Day. Preview the chapter, then assign certain passages for each day of the week. Carry a pocket New Testament. Memorize during small bits of time.
4. Study Each Chapter The Week You Memorize It. Check the meaning of any difficult words or phrases. Understand each idea within the context of its verse, chapter and book.
5. Visualize the Benefits that a memorization of the New Testament will have on your effectiveness as a teacher of God's word. Keep such benefits before you always.

How To Remember What You've Memorized

1. Take Advantage of "Dead Time." Recite to yourself what you've already learned, whenever walking, standing in line, waiting in offices, driving, etc. Most people have an hour of more of such time each day.
2. When once a chapter has been memorized, Recite That Chapter To Yourself once a day the week thereafter, then once a week the month thereafter, then once a month for the rest of your life. (See Schedule For Monthly Reading of the New Testament.)
3. When once a chapter has been memorized, Write That Chapter And Check It For Accuracy once per week for the month thereafter, then once per year for as long as you think necessary to maintain your accuracy. (This amounts to a chapter a day, Monday through Friday, throughout the year.)

How Much Time Will This Take?

That depends upon your memorization ability. However, even if you do not have a photographic memory, if you are intelligent enough, for example, to have graduated from high school, if you use your "dead time" wisely, it should not take more than an hour per day. Can you think of a better or more worthwhile use of your study time?

Benefits Derived From Memorizing Scripture

- (1) Better knowledge and understanding of scripture. (2) Personal enrichment and guidance from God. (3) Potentially increased faith. (4) Improved ability to overcome temptations. (5) Greater ability to serve by teaching, counseling, refuting error, exhorting, etc.

Rationale for This Plan

- New Testament books whose total chapters equal the number of weeks in the year are placed together in annual units.
- Certain books, because they may be grouped as separate units, are intentionally placed together. These are . . .
 - Ministerial Letters – Since this plan was originally designed primarily for preachers, it is appropriate that the memorization of New Testament books began with 1 & 2 Timothy and Titus.
 - Books by the same author - e.g. John, Luke, and Peter. (Books by Paul are the exception). Inasmuch as Mark's gospel is thought to be the "gospel according to Peter," it is appropriate that it be memorized along with 1 & 2 Peter.
- Some books, because of their similarity, are intentionally separated from one another to facilitate easier memorization and to give a more even spread of subject matter. These are . . .
 - The Gospels – Matthew, Mark, Luke, & John. "The gospel according to Paul," Romans, is placed in the year that a biographical gospel is not included.
 - Epistles on "Law and Gospel" – Romans, Galatians and Hebrews.
 - Paul's twin prison letters – Ephesians and Colossians.
- Notice: Most chapters in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John and Acts of Apostles have more than the average number of verses to be memorized each week. Therefore, whenever chapters in other books have less verses than the required weekly averages for that year, you'll need to advance your memorizing schedule beyond those chapters in order to complete the memorization schedule within the year.
- Since length of chapters within Luke and Acts are generally in excess of the five-year weekly averages, you may wish to take two weeks for memorizing most chapters in these books. However, this will extend your memorization schedule to six years rather than five.
- Of course, each person may design his own plan to correlate with his preaching, Bible class teaching materials, or personal studies. Or, in the absence of pre-developed plans, preachers may find it advantageous to plan expository sermons to correlate with their memorization schedules.
- If after trying this schedule for a reasonable period of time, you cannot keep up the pace, then you should design your own schedule for memorizing the New Testament. Concentrate on retaining what you have already learned, then add to it as you can. Take 10 or 12 years, if needed, but don't quit!

Monthly Reading Schedule

The schedule for reading the New Testament follows the schedule for quoting the New Testament with the exception that the gospel of Luke and Acts of Apostles are placed first in the monthly reading but last in the memorization schedule. Times required for reading scripture selections were determined by oral readings, rounded out to the nearest full minute.
